PREFACE

Since the time of initial contact between the aboriginal population and European explorers, relations between Canada's native people and the Government have been an important factor in the country's history. Today approximately 300,000 Canadian citizens are Indians registered according to the definitions of the Indian Act; many more who do not enjoy this status are of Indian descent. Representatives of these groups and other scholars concerned with this aspect of Canada's culture have initiated a growing number of research projects in the last few years.

Most registered Indians are members of some 574 separate communities or bands. Close to 2,300 reserves have been set aside for these bands; of this number, more than 300 (comprising over 3 million acres) are within the Prairie Provinces. In addition, there are over sixty officially designated Indian settlements in Alberta, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. Indian lands, including territories formerly designated for Indian use and reserves which are still in existence, are the subjects of much inquiry. While textual records are consulted frequently, other forms of documentation are sometimes overlooked. Maps and plans which form part of the archival record are often a rich source of historical information and studied in conjunction with textual material can provide a more complete picture of this aspect of Canada's past. Indeed, written documents are often unintelligible without the sketches or plans which originally accompanied them.

In 1977, at the Western Studies Conference in Calgary, Alberta, a listing of maps relating to Indian Reserves in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta was distributed by the Public Archives of Canada. Response to that listing was enthusiastic, and therefore plans to prepare a series of more complete cartobibliographies for that region and for the rest of Canada are being implemented. This is the second volume in the series. Volume I lists maps relating to the Province of British Columbia.

This catalogue lists significant cartographic documents within the holdings of the National Map Collection relating to Indian affairs in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. These include maps which can be used in studies of particular reserves, as well as a selection of more general material relating to Indian matters in Canada.

The majority of the items listed form part of the records of the Central Registry System of the Indian Affairs Branch. These maps, many of which had been folded to fit into the files, require special storage conditions if their long-term preservation is to be ensured, and therefore they have been separated from the textual material they accompanied. The files themselves remain in the custody of the Federal Archives Division, Public Archives of Canada (RG 10, Black Series). A finding aid which allows access to the maps and plans according to volume and file numbers is available from the National Map Collection (RG 10M, 78903/45).

Other material listed includes Indian Lands Sales maps from the Lands and Membership Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (RG 10M, 76703/9); Indian Affairs Survey Records plans (catalogued individually); maps from the Indian Claims Commission (RG 33M/115, 78903/43); and maps from other federal government departments and agencies. Finding aids for these groups exist as well, and are available to researchers in the National Map Collection. In addition, relevant material from other levels of government and from private sources has been included in this listing.

Stringent criteria have been applied in the selection of items such as general reference maps on which Indian reserves are shown. Township Plans, Sectional Maps, National Topographic System maps and provincial series maps are valuable sources. Due to the extent of these series, however, listing of individual map sheets was not possible.[1] In cases where a printed series map was used as a base on which pertinent information was added by hand, the map is included in this catalogue. These manuscript features make such items unique historical records.

Maps relating specifically to the Riel Rebellions have not been included, since this subject has been covered in depth elsewhere.[2]

Architectural material relating to Indian affairs, although a part of the National Map Collection's holdings, has not been listed in this publication.

The authors of this catalogue are indebted to their colleagues in the Public Archives of Canada for their assistance. Particular thanks are extended to William Oppen, formerly of the National Map Collection, and Jean-Pierre Lukowycz of the Federal Archives Division, for initiating this project; to Betty Kidd, Director, National Map Collection, for her support; to Dorothy Ahlgren, Chief, Government Cartographical and Architectural Records Section, for her encouragement and valuable assistance; and especially to Carmen Paul for her many hours of typing.

Users of this listing who wish to communicate comments or corrections, or acquire copies of material listed, are invited to contact the Government Cartographical and Architectural Records Section, National Map Collection, Public Archives of Canada, 395 Wellington Street, Ottawa, Canada K1A 0N3.

INTRODUCTION

Because the land is such an important factor in native life, its disposition has played an important role in relations between the Indian population and the Canadian government. The methods of obtaining lands desired for settlement have varied in different regions of the country according to the policies of the governing bodies of the time. The practice of the French colonial government was to set aside reserves without making treaties for the release of other lands. Britain, however, recognized Indian interest in the land and tried to obtain formal surrenders of territories wanted for development. Under British law, aboriginal title could be extinguished only by formal agreement, and only to the Crown. The Dominion government followed this course in its own dealings with native groups.

The signing of treaties was considered by the Government to be the ideal method of settling land questions with the native population. Although the Government attempted to be consistent in its dealings with Indians, it did not succeed in obtaining formal surrenders in all parts of the country. Even today approximately half of Canada's registered or "status" Indians are not governed by treaty and only about half of the land mass of the country has been formally ceded by the native people.

The first "treaty" in the west was concluded between the Hudson's Bay Company and the Indians of the Rupert's River area, where the Company established its first trading post in 1668. Rupert's Land, originally defined as the vast area comprising the lands drained by rivers flowing into Hudson's Bay, was granted to the Company in 1670. In 1688, a Royal Commission was given by King James II, authorizing the Company's representatives to make treaties on behalf of the Crown with the aboriginal population. Since the primary concern of the fur traders was not settlement,however, few of the agreements signed between the Company and the Indians involved land cession. For many years the Europeans engaged in trade with natives in western Canada without seriously disrupting their way of life.

By the mid-eighteenth century, European settlement in British North America was expanding westward with the result that conflicts were arising between settlers and the Indian population. To avoid uncontrolled encroachment of Indian territories, which could lead to hostility, provisions were included in the Royal Proclamation of 1763 (the document establishing the government of the territories recently acquired from France) to establish a tract of land "reserved" for the Indians. This territory consisted of land not already ceded or sold to the British Crown and not part of the Hudson's Bay Company territory or existing British colonies. The Proclamation forbade private purchases of Indian lands and the granting of patents for any lands in the territory not yet ceded or sold to the Crown.

In 1811, the Earl of Selkirk purchased the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company to a large tract of land in the Red River District. In 1817, Lord Selkirk negotiated a treaty with the Chippewa and Cree Indians for surrender of this land.

At the same time, colonial authorities in the east were concluding treaties with the native population. Early treaties were essentially land surrenders in return for cash grants or goods. Annuities became a standard part of most treaty terms after 1818. The allotment of reserve lands and provisions for hunting and fishing rights were not always stipulated in these early agreements.

The Robinson-Superior and Robinson-Huron Treaties, signed in 1850 in what is now northern Ontario, are considered to be the forerunners of those later negotiated in Western Canada. These were the first treaties to include what were to become standard provisions: once-for-all expenditures, annuities, reserve lands and hunting and fishing rights for the Indians.

The British North America Act of 1867 designated "Indians, and Lands reserved for the Indians" as a federal matter. Therefore, as each territory was added to the Dominion, jurisdiction of its Indian affairs fell to the federal government.

In 1869, the Hudson's Bay Company ceded its territorial rights to the Crown in return for a cash settlement and certain other benefits. Rupert's Land and the "North Western Territory" were combined to form the North-West Territories of Canada. Some of the inhabitants of the Red River Settlement, including Indians, Métis and a few whites, set up their own "provisional government" in opposition to the new territorial administration. This group, led by Louis Riel, attempted to prevent the new governor of the Territories, William McDougall, from assuming his duties. The uprising was suppressed without bloodshed. Partly because of these disturbances, the Government was prompted to create a separate province, Manitoba, of the Red River Settlement in 1870.

By 1871, with the pressures of westward expansion of European development and the diminishing supply of game, the survival of the Plains Indians was threatened and some of them saw the dominance of the white settlers over their territory as inevitable. Many were eager to enter into peace agreements with the newcomers, hoping in this way to secure the right to continue unmolested in their own way of life. Almost all of Western Canada is now included in the series of treaties numbered 1 through 11, signed between 1871 and 1921. The exceptions are most of British Columbia and the Yukon Territory, and the areas of the present Northwest Territories occupied by the Inuit. These treaties were patterned on earlier agreements signed in Ontario and on treaties concluded in the United States after the Revolution.

The first such agreement was signed on August 3, 1871 at Stone Fort or Lower Fort Garry in southern Manitoba, with the Chippewas and Swampy Crees. Six more treaties, similar to the first, were concluded in the 1870s in the present-day Prairie Provinces. Terms of these included the relinquishment of territorial rights from Lake Superior to the Rocky Mountains, permission to hunt and fish on Crown lands, gifts and annuities, agricultural assistance and educational facilities. Reserve lands were allocated on the basis of 160 acres per family of five for Treaties 1, 2 and 5, and 640 acres per family of five for Treaties 3, 4, 6 and 7. These lands were not to be sold or alienated without the consent of the Indians concerned.

Reserves were also granted in the 1870s to a number of Sioux Indians who came north from the United States to avoid conflicts with the American government.

In 1885, dissatisfaction on the part of the Métis population and some Indians, led by Louis Riel, resulted in the North-West Rebellion. Indians not yet settled on reserves and those of the Duck Lake District of Saskatchewan took part in the uprising, which was put down by force. The government later offered land scrip (certificates which could be exchanged for land) to those Indians and half-breeds not eligible or not wishing to be included under treaty.

In 1899, Treaty 8 was signed with the Indians of what is now northern Alberta and Saskatchewan. In 1900, the treaty area was expanded to include parts of British Columbia and the present-day Northwest Territories. In 1905, Treaty 9 was made with Indians in northern Ontario, and in 1906, Indians of northern Saskatchewan signed Treaty 10. According to the terms of these three agreements, reserves of up to 640 acres per family of five were to be allotted. Other terms were similar to those of previous treaties.

Treaty 5 was extended to cover northern Manitoba in 1908, and in 1921, when oil was discovered at Norman Wells, Treaty 11 was signed with Indians of the western Northwest Territories. Again reserves of 640 acres per family of five were stipulated; however, no reserves have yet been established under Treaties 8 and 11 in the Northwest Territories.

Responsibility for Indian affairs has been accorded varying degrees of importance by the Canadian government since 1867, and administrative changes reflect this shift of emphasis. At Confederation, Indian matters were placed under the control of the Department of Secretary of State for the Provinces, the Secretary of State being named the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. In 1873, the Indians and Indian Lands Branch was created within the new Department of the Interior. At that time two superintendencies were created to administer the western treaty areas: the Manitoba Superintendency (including areas governed by Treaties 1, 2, 3 and 4) and the North-West Territories Superintendency (including areas under Treaties 5, 6 and 7). Under each superintendent were Indian agents who were responsible for Indian bands in their agencies.

The first Indian Act (39 Vic. c. 18), which established a registry of natives eligible for certain privileges, while at the same time delineating the boundaries of activities allowed to these individuals, was passed in 1876. Eskimos (Inuit) and those taking half-breed scrip were specifically excluded from the provisions of this legislation. In 1880, the Department of Indian Affairs was created to represent the Dominion government in all native matters.

By 1898, several administrative divisions called inspectorates had been established in the West, including three in Manitoba and three in the Northwest Territories. In 1911 the Fort Smith Indian Agency was set up for the administration of the Treaty 8 area, and the Fort Simpson Agency for non-treaty Indians of the Mackenzie Basin and other areas. In 1926 another agency was established at Fort Resolution.

The Department of Indian Affairs continued to operate until 1936, when Indian Affairs became a branch of the Department of Mines and Resources. In 1949 the Branch was transferred to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. A revised Indian Act (15 Geo. VI c. 29) came into effect in 1951. In 1965 the Indian Affairs Branch was moved to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Since 1966 Indian and Inuit affairs have been among the responsibilities of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, also referred to as the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs. Today the Department operates through regional and district offices.

Historical evidence of relations between native groups and the Government of Canada is found in the records of every administrative body assigned the responsibility for native affairs. A great many cartographical items have been created by these departments and others in the course of their dealings with native people.

These range from printed maps and atlases produced for public distribution to sketches hastily made to accompany letters from individuals to Indian agents. Rough drafts, official surveys and maps made for Royal Commissions are all part of the federal archival record, and all such documents have been included in this listing.

It must be stressed that this catalogue is not definitive. Provincial archives and other institutions hold material valuable for research. Many archival maps relating to Indian affairs remain with other records of federal government departments, either in the departments' current records systems, or with material held by the Federal Archives Division of the Public Archives of Canada. The transfer of cartographical items of historical value to the National Map Collection will take place over the years, and it is hoped that this listing can be revised periodically to include these new acquisitions.

We trust that this volume will be useful to scholars of native history and to native people seeking a more complete understanding of their heritage.

FORMAT

General Organization

Current provincial and territorial boundaries have been respected in the arrangement of the entries, regardless of what province or district the reserves were in at the time of map production. Maps have been listed by reserve name whenever possible, even when several reserves are shown on one map. Where this was not possible, maps have been listed by agency name. Since agency names and boundaries have changed over the years, researchers are advised to consult entries under other agency names. Entries are arranged alphabetically, then by date.

Reserve Names and Numbers

The authority used for reserve names and numbers is the Schedule of Indian Reserves and Settlements (Ottawa: Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, 1972). For reserves which are not listed in this schedule, such as reserves which no longer exist, schedules published in departmental annual reports have been used as a guide whenever possible. For areas never officially confirmed as Indian reserves, the names which were in use when the maps were created have been used.

Map Titles

Titles have been transcribed as they appear on the maps. Additions to original titles have also been recorded. Punctuation has been changed when necessary. Information which does not appear on the maps is inserted in brackets. Usually information in brackets has been obtained from related documentation.

Dates

Entries are arranged chronologically by date of map production. If the date does not appear on the map, it has been supplied in brackets, thus: [1885]. Dates stamped on the map or dates of related documentation have been used. The date of additions to a map is recorded after this first date. When more than one addition appears, the latest has been used. If the later date appears on the map, it is listed thus: 1885 (1898). If it has been determined from other sources, it is given in brackets, thus: 1885 [1898]. In cases where the date could not be ascertained, the letters "N.D./S.D." (i.e. no date) have been used. Undated entries are placed before dated entries.

Multiple Copies

Duplicates or other versions of a map have been referred to as copies. Researchers are advised that all copies of a map should be consulted.

Cross-References

Alternate names and alternate spellings of names have been listed with a "Refer to/Consulter" reference to the name under which entries for that reserve or agency appear. For example, "Ahtahkakoop No. 104 - Refer to/Consulter: Atakakup No. 104" indicates that entries for that reserve are found under the name Atakakup No. 104. Often, several reserves or agencies are shown on one map. In these cases, the complete title has been listed under one reserve or agency name. Under the names of other reserves or agencies shown, "See/Voir" references are given for the appropriate date. For example, "Keeseekoose No. 66A - 1910 - See/Voir: Keeseekoose No. 66" indicates that a 1910 map listed under Keeseekoose No. 66 also shows Keeseekoose Reserve No. 66A.

PRÉFACE

Depuis l'époque où les premiers contacts se sont établis entre la population aborigène et les explorateurs européens, les relations entre les autochtones du Canada et les gouvernements ont joué un rôle important dans l'histoire du pays. Aujourd'hui, environ 300 000 citoyens canadiens sont des Indiens inscrits conformément aux définitions de la Loi sur les Indiens; des citoyens beaucoup plus nombreux, qui ne jouissent pas de ce statut, sont d'ascendance indienne. Depuis quelques années, des représentants de ces groupes et des spécialistes de cet aspect de la culture canadienne ont mis sur pied un nombre grandissant de projets de recherche.

La plupart des Indiens inscrits sont membres de quelque 574 communautés séparées ou bandes. Près de 2 300 réserves, dont 300 (plus de 3 millions d'acres) dans les Prairies, ont été mises à la disposition de ces bandes. D'autre part, il y a plus de soixante agglomérations indiennes, officiellement désignées, en Alberta, dans le Territoire du Yukon et dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest. Les terres indiennes, y compris les territoires autrefois réservés à l'usage des Indiens et les réserves encore existantes, font l'objet d'un grand nombre de demandes d'information. On consulte fréquemment les textes, mais parfois on néglige d'autres formes de documentation. Les cartes et les plans conservés dans des archives constituent souvent des sources abondantes d'information historique et, si on les étudie conjointement avec les textes, ils peuvent offrir une image plus complète de cet aspect du passé au Canada. En fait, les documents écrits sont souvent inintelligibles si on ne consulte pas en plus les dessins ou les plans qui les accompagnaient à l'origine.

En 1977, à la Western Studies Conference, à Calgary, en Alberta, les Archives publiques du Canada ont distribué une liste de cartes sur les réserves indiennes du Manitoba, de la Saskatchewan et de l'Alberta. Cette liste a connu un tel succès que, par la suite, on a décidé de préparer des cartobibliographies plus complètes pour cette région et pour le reste du Canada. Voici le second volume de cette série. Le premier volume présentait la liste des cartes de la Colombie-Britannique.

Ce catalogue donne la liste des cartes importantes se rapportant aux affaires indiennes de l'Alberta, de la Saskatchewan, du Manitoba, du Territoire du Yukon et des Territoires du Nord-Ouest, conservées par la Collection nationale de cartes et plans. On y trouve des cartes destinées à l'étude de certaines réserves en particulier, ainsi qu'un choix de documents d'intérêt plus général touchant les affaires indiennes du Canada.

La majorité des documents énumérés font partie des Archives centrales de la Direction des affaires indiennes. Ces cartes, dont un grand nombre avaient dû être pliées pour être rangées dans les classeurs, exigent des conditions particulières d'entreposage si l'on veut assurer leur conservation à long terme et, par conséquent, elles ont été séparées des documents qui les accompagnaient. Les dossiers eux-mêmes restent confiés aux soins de la Division des archives fédérales, Archives publiques du Canada (RG 10, série noire). À la Collection nationale de cartes et plans, on peut consulter un instrument de recherche qui permet de repérer les cartes et les plans d'après le numéro du volume et le numéro du dossier (RG 10M, 78903/45).

Parmi les autres documents énumérés, citons les cartes relatives aux ventes de terrains indiens qui proviennent de la Direction de la gestion foncière et de l'effectif des bandes du ministère des Affaires indiennes et du Nord canadien (RG 10M, 76703/9); les plans Indian Affairs Survey Records (catalogués individuellement); les cartes de la Commission d'étude des revendications des Indiens (RG 33M/115, 78903/43); et les cartes provenant d'autres ministères et agences du gouvernement fédéral. Des instruments de recherche existent également pour ces groupes et sont mis à la disposition des chercheurs à la Collection nationale de cartes et plans. De plus, dans cette liste, on a inclus des documents pertinents provenant d'autres niveaux de gouvernement et de sources privées.

Des critères rigoureux nous ont guidés pour établir une sélection des documents comme cela s'est fait dans le cas des cartes générales sur lesquelles figurent les réserves indiennes. Les plans de cantons, les cartes Sectional, les cartes du Système national de référence cartographique et les cartes des séries provinciales constituent des ressources précieuses. Cependant, à cause de l'ampleur de ces séries, on n'a pu faire une liste de toutes les cartes qui les composent.[1] Toutefois, lorsqu'une carte de série a été utilisée comme un document de travail auquel on a ajouté à la main des renseignements utiles, ce document apparaît dans le catalogue. Ces indications manuscrites font de ces cartes des documents historiques uniques en leur genre.

Les cartes se rapportant spécifiquement aux rébellions de Louis Riel ne sont également pas incluses, ce sujet ayant déjà été traité en profondeur.[2] Les documents architecturaux relatifs aux affaires indiennes, bien que faisant partie des fonds de la Collection nationale de cartes et plans, ne figurent pas dans cette publication.

Les auteurs de ce catalogue remercient ici leurs collègues des Archives publiques du Canada qui les ont aidés dans leur tâche. Ils remercient spécialement William Oppen, autrefois de la Collection nationale de cartes et plans, et Jean-Pierre Lukowycz, de la Division des archives fédérales, qui sont à l'origine de ce projet; Betty Kidd, directrice de la Collection nationale de cartes et plans, pour son aide; Dorothy Ahlgren, chef de la Section des documents cartographiques et architecturaux du gouvernement, pour ses encouragements et sa précieuse collaboration; et en particulier, ils adressent leurs remerciements à Carmen Paul pour les nombreuses heures de dactylographie qu'elle a fournies.

Nous invitons les utilisateurs de cette liste qui souhaitent faire part de leurs commentaires, suggérer des corrections ou encore qui désirent acquérir des copies des documents cités, à communiquer avec la Section des documents cartographiques et architecturaux du gouvernement, Collection nationale de cartes et plans, Archives publiques du Canada, 395, rue Wellington, Ottawa, Canada K1A 0N3.

INTRODUCTION

Le territoire étant un élément primordial de la vie des autochtones, il n'est pas étonnant que sa répartition ait joué un rôle important dans les relations entre les populations indiennes et le gouvernement canadien. Les méthodes utilisées pour obtenir les terres convoitées par les autorités gouvernementales en vue de la colonisation ont varié selon les régions ou la politique en cours à l'époque. Ainsi le gouvernement colonial français avait pour pratique d'établir des réserves sans signer de traités pour la cession d'autres territoires. Toutefois la Grande-Bretagne reconnaissant le droit des Indiens au territoire, tenta d'obtenir des cessions officielles pour les terres destinées à être exploitées. Selon la loi britannique, les droits de propriété des autochtones ne pouvaient être abolis que par entente officielle et en faveur seulement de la Couronne. Le gouvernement du Dominion observa cette pratique dans ses transactions avec les groupes autochtones.

Le gouvernement estimait que la meilleure façon de régler les questions territoriales avec la population autochtone était de signer des traités. Cependant, bien qu'il eût tenté des négociations uniformes avec les Indiens, il ne réussit jamais à obtenir des renonciations officielles dans chaque partie du pays. Encore aujourd'hui, près de la moitié des Indiens inscrits du Canada n'est pas visée par les traités et les autochtones n'ont cédé officiellement que la moitié tout au plus du territoire du pays.

Le premier traité conclu dans l'Ouest liait la Compagnie de la baie d'Hudson et les Indiens de la région de la rivière de Rupert, région où la compagnie avait établi son premier poste de traite en 1668. La terre de Rupert, qui englobait à l'origine le vaste territoire arrosé par les rivières se jetant dans la baie d'Hudson, fut octroyée à la compagnie en 1670. En 1688, cette même compagnie se vit accorder par le roi Jacques II une commission royale autorisant ses représentants à conclure des traités avec la population autochtone au nom de la Couronne. Mais comme les commerçants de fourrures ne s'intéressaient pas particulièrement à la colonisation, les ententes signées entre la compagnie et les Indiens faisaient rarement état de cessions de territoires. Pendant de nombreuses années, les Européens firent ainsi du commerce avec les autochtones de l'Ouest du Canada sans que leur mode de vie en soit véritablement modifié.

Au milieu du XVIII[e] siècle, la colonisation de l'Amérique du Nord britannique s'étendit vers l'Ouest engendrant des conflits entre les colons européens et les peuples indiens. Pour éviter que les Blancs n'empiètent exagérément sur les territoires des Indiens, ce qui aurait pu amener des conflagrations, on inclut certaines clauses dans la proclamation royale de 1763, (document établissant la souveraineté britannique sur les territoires récemment acquis de la France). En effet, des dispositions y prévoyaient que les terres n'ayant pas été cédées ou vendues à la Couronne britannique, de même que celles n'appartenant ni à la Compagnie de la baie d'Hudson ni aux colonies britanniques existantes, seraient réservées aux Indiens. La proclamation défendait aux particuliers l'achat de toutes terres indiennes et interdisait l'octroi de lettres patentes pour toutes terres de la région non encore cédées ou vendues à la Couronne.

En 1811, le comte de Selkirk acheta les droits de la Compagnie de la baie d'Hudson sur une large bande de terre, dans le district de la rivière Rouge, négociant par la suite en 1817, un traité de renonciation avec les Indiens Chippewas et Cris.

À la même époque, les autorités coloniales concluaient dans l'est du pays des traités avec la population autochtone. Les premières ententes consistaient essentiellement en renonciations de territoires en échange d'argent comptant ou de marchandises. Après 1818, on ajouta à la plupart des traités des dispositions sur le versement de rentes annuelles, bien que l'octroi de terres réservées et les droits de chasse et de pêche n'y étaient pas toujours stipulés.

Les traités Robinson-Superior et Robinson-Huron, signés en 1850 dans la région qui constitue maintenant le nord de l'Ontario, laissaient présager les conditions des ententes négociées plus tard dans l'Ouest. Il s'agit en effet des premiers traités à inclure des clauses qui allaient s'appliquer partout: versements forfaitaires, rentes annuelles, terres de réserve, droits de chasse et de pêche pour les Indiens.

L'Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique de 1867 accordait juridiction au gouvernement fédéral sur les questions relatives aux « Indiens et terres réservées aux Indiens ». L'admission de tout nouveau territoire au Dominion relevait donc du gouvernement fédéral, de même que toutes les questions relatives aux Indiens qui occupaient ces terres.

En 1869, la Compagnie de la baie d'Hudson céda ses droits territoriaux à la Couronne en échange d'un règlement monétaire et de certains autres avantages. La terre de Rupert et le « Territoire du Nord-Ouest » furent donc réunis pour former les Territoires du Nord-Ouest du Canada. Sous la conduite de Louis Riel, un groupe d'habitants de la colonie de la rivière Rouge, composé d'Indiens, de Métis et de quelques Blancs, établit alors son propre gouvernement provisoire en vue de s'opposer à la nouvelle administration territoriale et d'empêcher le nouveau gouverneur des Territoires, William McDougall, de remplir ses fonctions. Ce soulèvement fut maîtrisé sans effusion de sang, mais ce fut l'un des facteurs qui, en 1870, poussèrent le gouvernement à faire de la colonie de la rivière Rouge une province distincte appelée Manitoba.

En 1871, en raison des pressions causées par la poussée continue des Européens vers l'Ouest et la diminution des réserves de gibier, les Indiens des Prairies voyaient leur survie menacée, alors que certains considéraient comme inévitable la domination des colons blancs sur leurs territoires. Nombre d'entre eux désiraient donc conclure des ententes pacifiques avec les nouveaux venus, espérant ainsi obtenir le droit de conserver sans problèmes leur façon de vivre. Presque tout l'Ouest du Canada est maintenant visé par une série de traités numérotés de un à onze et signés entre 1871 et 1921; le Yukon et la majeure partie de la Colombie-Britannique font exception, de même que les terres occupées par les Inuit dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest actuels. Ces traités s'inspiraient de ceux signés auparavant en Ontario et de ceux conclus aux États-Unis après l'Indépendance.

Le premier de ces traités fut signé le 3 août 1871 au fort Stone ou Petit fort Garry, entre les Chippewas et les Moskégons du sud du Manitoba. Six autres traités semblables furent conclus au cours des années 1870, sur le territoire occupé actuellement par les provinces des Prairies. Par ces traités, les Indiens abandonnaient leurs droits territoriaux depuis le lac Supérieur jusqu'aux montagnes Rocheuses, mais obtenaient en contrepartie les droits de chasse et de pêche sur les terres de la Couronne, des dons, des rentes annuelles, une aide agricole et des installations scolaires. On leur alloua également des terres de réserve à raison de 160 acres par famille de cinq personnes pour les traités 1, 2 et 5, et de 640 acres par famille de cinq personnes pour les taités 3, 4, 6 et 7. On ne vendrait ou aliénerait ces terres sans le consentement des Indiens concernés.

En plus, on octroya dans les années 1870 des réserves à un certain nombre de Sioux originaires des États-Unis, montés vers le nord pour éviter les conflits avec le gouvernement américain.

En 1885 l'insatisfaction des Métis et de certains Indiens, sous la conduite de Louis Riel, entraîna la rébellion du Nord-Ouest. Les Indiens du district de Duck Lake en Saskatchewan, et ceux qui n'étaient pas encore établis sur des réserves, prirent part à ce soulèvement qui fut maté par la force. Le gouvernement offrit plus tard des certificats de concession de terres aux Indiens et aux Métis qui ne pouvaient pas ou ne voulaient pas être inclus dans les traités.

En 1899, le traité nº 8 fut signé avec les Indiens de la région qui constitue maintenant le nord de l'Alberta et de la Saskatchewan. La zone visée par le traité fut étendue en 1900 à certaines régions de la Colombie-Britannique et aux Territoires du Nord-Ouest actuels. En 1905, les Indiens du nord de l'Ontario signèrent le traité nº 9, et en 1906, ceux du nord de la Saskatchewan, le traité nº 10. Selon les termes de ces trois ententes, les Indiens devaient disposer de réserves allant jusqu'à 640 acres par famille de cinq; les autres conditions étaient semblables à celles des traités précédents.

Le traité nº 5 fut étendu au nord du Manitoba en 1908, et le traité nº 11 fut signé avec les Indiens du secteur ouest des Territoires du Nord-Ouest en 1921, lorsqu'on découvrit du pétrole à Norman Wells. Ces traités prévoyaient eux aussi des réserves d'un maximum de 640 acres par famille de cinq, mais aucune réserve n'a encore été établie dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest en vertu des traités nºs 8 et 11.

Depuis 1867, l'importance accordée par le gouvernement canadien aux affaires indiennes a varié selon les époques et les changements administratifs reflètent ces fluctuations. Lors de la Confédération, les affaires indiennes furent placées sous l'autorité du Secrétariat d'État pour les provinces, alors que le secrétaire d'État fut nommé surintendant général pour les Affaires indiennes. En 1873, la Direction des Indiens et des terres indiennes fut créée au sein du nouveau ministère de l'Intérieur. À la même époque, deux surintendances furent établies pour l'administration des régions visées par les traités de l'Ouest : celle du Manitoba, chargée des régions auxquelles s'appliquaient les traités nºs 1, 2, 3 et 4; celle du Nord-Ouest, chargée des territoires régis par les traités nºs 5, 6 et 7. Chaque surintendant avait sous ses ordres des agents indiens responsables des bandes relevant de leur agence.

Le premier Acte des Sauvages (39 Vic., c. 18) fut adopté en 1876 afin de déterminer quels autochtones étaient admissibles à certains privilèges, tout en délimitant les activités qui leur étaient permises. Les Inuit étaient expressément exclus des dispositions de cette loi, de même que ceux qui avaient reçu des certificats de concession de terres. En 1880, le ministère des Affaires indiennes fut créé pour représenter le gouvernement du Dominion dans tous les domaines touchant les autochtones.

En 1898, plusieurs divisions administratives, appelées «inspectorats», avaient été créées dans l'Ouest, dont trois au Manitoba et trois dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest. En 1911, l'agence indienne de Fort Smith fut établie pour assurer l'administration du territoire régi par le traité nº 8, et l'agence de Fort Simpson, pour s'occuper des Indiens du bassin du Mackenzie et d'autres régions qui n'étaient pas visées par des traités. En 1926, une agence fut ouverte à Fort Resolution.

Le ministère des Affaires indiennes poursuivit son activité jusqu'en 1936, date à laquelle ses responsabilités furent confiées à une direction du ministère des Mines et Ressources. En 1949, cette direction fut transférée au ministère de la Citoyenneté et de l'Immigration. Une nouvelle loi sur les Indiens (15 Geo. VI, c. 29) fut promulguée en 1951. En 1965, la Direction des affaires indiennes fut confiée au ministère du Nord canadien et des Ressources nationales. Depuis 1966, les affaires indiennes et inuit relèvent du ministère des Affaires indiennes et du Nord canadien, qui œuvre aujourd'hui par l'entremise de bureaux régionaux et de bureaux de districts.

Les dossiers de tous les organismes administratifs chargés des affaires indiennes contiennent de la documentation historique sur les relations entre les groupes autochtones et le gouvernement du Canada. Ces ministères et ces autres organismes ont notamment créé de nombreux documents cartographiques dans le cadre de leur travail avec les peuples autochtones. Ainsi, on y retrouve des cartes et des atlas imprimés produits pour la diffusion publique et des croquis dessinés à la hâte pour accompagner les lettres envoyées par des particuliers à des agents indiens. Qu'il s'agisse de brouillons sommaires, de relevés officiels, ou de cartes réalisées à l'intention de commissions royales d'enquête, tous ces documents d'archives du gouvernement fédéral sont inclus dans le présent répertoire.

Il convient de souligner cependant que ce catalogue n'est pas définitif. Les dépôts d'archives provinciaux et divers autres établissements possèdent eux aussi des documents utiles à la recherche. Par ailleurs, de nombreuses cartes d'archives portant sur les affaires indiennes sont encore conservées avec d'autres documents des ministères fédéraux. On peut les retracer dans les dossiers actifs des ministères en cause ou dans les documents conservés à la Division des Archives fédérales, aux Archives publiques du Canada. Les documents cartographiques d'intérêt historique seront transférés graduellement à la Collection nationale de cartes et plans et il faut espérer que la présente liste pourra être révisée périodiquement pour y inclure ces nouvelles acquisitions.

Ce volume devrait cependant être très utile aux chercheurs qui étudient l'histoire des premiers habitants de notre pays, ainsi qu'aux autochtones désireux de mieux comprendre le patrimoine de leur peuple.

PRÉSENTATION

Organisation générale

Dans la rédaction des notices, on a respecté les frontières provinciales et territoriales actuelles sans tenir compte de la province ou du district où se trouvaient les réserves au moment où la carte a été dressée. Les cartes sont classées par noms de réserves chaque fois que c'est possible, même si plusieurs réserves figurent sur la même carte. Lorsque ce n'est pas possible, les cartes sont classées par noms d'agences. Comme les noms d'agences et les frontières ont changé au cours des années, on conseille aux chercheurs de consulter les notices sous d'autres noms d'agences. Les notices sont disposées par ordre alphabétique, puis chronologique.

Noms et numéros de réserves

On s'est basé sur Schedule of Indian Reserves and Settlements (ministère des Affaires indiennes et du Nord canadien, Ottawa, 1972) pour déterminer les noms et les numéros de réserves. Dans le cas des réserves qui ne figurent pas sur cette liste, par exemples celles qui n'existent plus, on s'est fondé chaque fois que c'était possible sur les listes publiées dans les rapports annuels du ministère. Pour les régions qui n'ont jamais été officiellement confirmées comme réserves indiennes, on a utilisé les noms en usage au moment où les cartes ont été établies.

Titres des cartes

On a transcrit les titres tels qu'ils apparaissent sur les cartes. On a aussi noté les additions aux titres originaux. On a changé la ponctuation lorsque c'était nécessaire. Les renseignements qui ne figurent pas sur les cartes sont mis entre crochets. Ces renseignements proviennent généralement de documents connexes.

Dates

Exemplaires multiples

Les duplicata ou les versions successives d'une carte ont été désignés comme « copies ». Les chercheurs devraient consulter tous les exemplaires d'une carte.

Renvois

Les autres noms et les noms orthographiés d'une façon différente ont été classés avec la référence « Refer to/Consulter » ajoutée au nom sous lequel les notices pour cette réserve ou cette agence apparaissent. Par exemple, « Ahtahkakoop n° 104 - Refer to/Consulter: Atakakup n° 104 » indique que les notices pour cette réserve se trouvent sous le nom Atakakup n° 104. Souvent, plusieurs réserves ou plusieurs agences figurent sur une seule carte. En ce cas, le titre complet a été inscrit sous une seule réserve ou un seul nom d'agence. Sous les noms des autres réserves ou des autres agences qui figurent sur la carte, on donne les références « See/Voir » pour la date appropriée. Par exemple, « Keeseekoose nº 66A-1910-See/Voir : Keeseekoose nº 66 » indique qu'une carte de 1910 classée sous Keeseekoose nº 66 montre aussi la réserve Keeseekoose nº 66A.
